So Proud to share my Story!

Yesterday marked the 16th Fathers Day that I have spent without my dad. I was/and still am a Daddy's Girl. When I was a young adult and struggling through the decisions of what to do as a career...I often spoke with my father at length about those choices. He never told me what to do, but we talked options through.

Those experiences with him before he passed away from Prostate Cancer in December of 1999 are forever etched into my memory and still help me today. This is the reason why I decided to do what was best for myself and my family by working from home.

I wrote the article below nearly a year ago in a friends kitchen while our kids played and we talked. It finally appeared in the paper on Father's Day 2015 - Thanks Daddy! Love you always...sure hope I am making you proud.

Motherhood changed me — beyond my wildest dreams.

I have been working from home consistently since 2006. My oldest son was born in December 2005. I did not return to my regular full-time job after my maternity leave was up.

The initial struggles were finding the right fit for a legitimate work-from-home job. I did find one as an on-call nursing supervisor for a home health agency. I had that job for about seven months until I was let go, thankfully.

In April 2006, I began working with Kristi, a woman who had a small website design business based on of Westchester County in New York.

I worked with her remotely (starting off as a virtual assistant then taking over some of the website maintenance duties) and did not meet her in person until November 2007.

We had a great working relationship, and I had a very good relationship with her clients.

In November 2012, Kristi and her husband were facing a move to Canada. When Kristi decided to move on, it made sense to transition her clients to me.

During the time between November 2007 and November 2012, I also began acquiring my own website clients as well.

So now along with the 10 clients I had of my own, I added an additional 45 clients from Kristi.

The main struggle with this was all that comes with owning your own business. I had to set up the proper banking accounts and merchant accounts to accept credit cards as a form of payment, and transitioning all of the clients over to my software.

I was not in a position to contract that data entry part out, so I took it on myself. So now aside from the business of working with clients and their projects, I now had to find time to take care of the “business” of my business.

About eight months into this new part of my work life, my cousin Liz called to talk to me about a new side business that she was doing.

9 years ago when I had my son Dean, I had to create my own work from home job. I had the will and made a way to be able to stay home and raise my family on my own terms. This company was still in high-end department stores at that time...I truly wish this turn-key opportunity was available to me back then. But it is available to YOU, now.

Everyone has skin, there is a product that everyone can use...let's talk today.

Where there is a will, there is a way! I've got it, you need to talk to me!
